There are only three grounds on which appeals to infant classes may be considered. Please indicate below, which of these grounds you believe applies in your case.

b) That a place would have been offered if the admission arrangements had complied with admissions law or had been correctly and impartially applied.
For your appeal to succeed on this ground, you will have to show that the normal admission arrangements as published by the Admission Authority were not properly followed and if they had, your child would have been offered a place.

 That the decision not to admit your child was not one which a reasonable Admission Authority would make in the circumstances of the case.
